Brooklyn College

Herbert Kurz, ’41, and the Kurz Family Foundation donated $1.6 million to create the Herbert Kurz Chair in Constitutional Rights. The chair will promote teaching and research.

Lawrence Rand has given $1.5 million to create an endowment in honor of his wife, Madelon Leventhal Rand, ’64, a former officer of the Brooklyn College Foundation and adjunct lecturer in the English Department. The gift will fund the Madelon Leventhal Rand Chair in Literature, an extended visiting professorship designed to attract scholars from around the world to teach graduate courses.

CUNY Graduate School of Journalism

James Greenfield, a former editor at The New York Times, and his wife, Ene Riisna, formerly of ABC News, have set up a trust fund with a present value of $730,000 to support international journalism at the Journalism School. The gift will allow foreign journalists to study at the CUNY J-School and students from the school to intern in other countries.

Baruch College

The Department of Marketing and International Business has received its first major gift, a $250,000 donation from Interpublic Group. The gift will help launch a concentration in digital marketing, course offerings in Web analytics and social media, student internships, faculty research in digital marketing, advertising and international marketing, the support of six marketing fellows and an upgrade to the Marketing Resource Lab.

College of Staten Island

CSI has established the largest scholarship endowment in the history of the CSI Foundation with two gifts totaling $300,000 from the Brooklyn Home for Aged Men. $100,000 was given in honor of the Brooklyn Home’s late president, Nancy K. Munson. $200,000 established eight new endowed scholarships for Geriatric Nursing students. Each gift was matched with a $100,000 from the Department of Education.
Kingsborough Community College

The Northfield Bank Foundation donated $10,000 to the KCC Scholarship Fund to provide scholarships for twenty students, many of whom are retooling in response to the changing job market.

Borough of Manhattan Community College

BMCC received a grant of $105,000 from New York Community Trust for a study entitled The Community College Odyssey: Identifying and Addressing the Obstacles for Women of Color. The project, which also involves Hostos and LaGuardia Community Colleges, will be the first of its kind to investigate the unique issues faced by the college’s largest demographic group.

BMCC was also awarded a $100,000 grant from the Bank of New York Mellon, to support BMCC’s highly successful MoneyWorks financial literacy program. Now in its fourth year, MoneyWorks consists of a 12-segment curriculum covering all aspects of personal finance and investing.